

Develop a comprehensive manifesto outlining your personal philosophy of life. Explore your beliefs, values, and principles regarding the meaning of life, purpose, and morality. This project encourages deep introspection, critical thinking, and the synthesis of ideas discussed throughout the course.

Submission Guidelines:

- 2,500 words.
- Sources: A minimum of two sources from the syllabus must be discussed. Any citation style that you prefer is fine.
- Plagiarism detection tools will be used to ensure originality.
- Due by May 17th, by 11:59pm (submission via Canvas).

Introduction: Begin with an introduction that sets the tone for your manifesto. Discuss why the quest for meaning is significant to you and provide context for the development of your personal philosophy. State whether you have adopted objectivism, subjectivism, or nihilism about the meaning of life.

Philosophical Foundations: Explore and incorporate key philosophical concepts covered in the course. Reference relevant philosophers, theories, and perspectives that have influenced your thinking about the meaning of life.

Beliefs and Values:

Articulate your core beliefs and values regarding existence, morality, and purpose. Reflect on how these beliefs have evolved and been shaped by personal experiences, cultural influences, and philosophical insights.

The Role of Others:

Discuss the role of relationships, community, and societal connections in shaping your understanding of the meaning of life. Consider how your philosophy aligns with or challenges communal perspectives.

Challenges and Contradictions:

Address any internal conflicts, uncertainties, or contradictions within your personal philosophy. Acknowledge the complexities and nuances inherent in contemplating life's meaning.

Impact on Decision-Making:

Explore how your philosophy of life influences your decision-making process, ethical considerations, and life choices. Provide specific examples to illustrate the practical applications of your beliefs.

Future Development:

Conclude your manifesto by outlining how you envision your personal philosophy evolving in the future. Discuss potential influences, experiences, or philosophical insights that may shape your beliefs over time.
